"But there were no more books, just the curling up of the people quietly in corners and doorways." (Collins 25-28).	Without literture and imagination to comfort them, people lose their sense of joy and warmth. Instead of "curling up" happily with a book, they curl up in fear and helplessness, physically shrinking away from a world that has stripped away their humanity
3. ANALYSIS: What does the evidence reveal about censorship on the whole?	4. CONCLUSION: How does this source help support your answer to the essential question?
Censorship destroys more than just physical paper; it erases intellectual refuge, empathy, and comfort. When a society allows censorship to eliminate freethought and things that bring joy, people become hollow shells of their former selves - isolated and hopeless. Humanity is reduced to mere survival in a cold unfeeling environment.
